SHORT ANSWER-ESSAY

2.51. Define balanced scorecard. What are the four perspectives it considers? Provide examples of metrics used to measure them.

The balanced scorecard is a means of performance measurement that provides managers with a chance to look at the overall company performance or the performance of departments or functions from the perspective of internal and external customers, employees, and shareholders.

The four perspectives and examples of metrics used to measure them include:

Customer (time, quality, performance, service, cost)

Internal (processes that influence customer satisfaction)

Innovation and learning (operating efficiency, employee satisfaction, continuous improvement)

Financial (profitability, growth, shareholder value)

2.52. Describe the human capital requirements for fortresses, baseball teams, clubs, and academies.

Fortresses—companies with limited resources for training that tend to recruit from the outside

Baseball teams—companies that require innovation and creativity; recruit from other companies or new graduates with specialized skills

Clubs—companies in highly regulated industries that rely on developing their own talent

Academies—companies that require specialized skill and focus on developing their individual employees

Difficulty: medium

2.53. Explain the business-embedded learning function.

Page 19

The BE learning function is characterized by five competencies: strategic direction, product design, structural versatility, product delivery, and accountability for results. It views trainees, managers, and senior-level decision makers as customers of training.

The most noticeable feature of a BE learning function is its structure. In BE learning functions all persons who are involved in the training process communicate and share resources. Trainers—who are responsible for developing training materials, delivering instruction, and supporting trainees—work together to ensure that learning occurs. Trainers not only have specialized competencies, but also can serve as internal consultants by providing a range of services, such as needs assessment, content improvement, and the like.

2.54. How does the strategic value of jobs and their uniqueness influence how training and learning resources are invested?

Uniqueness refers to the extent to which employees are rare, specialized, and not highly available in the labor market. Strategic value refers to employee potential to improve company effectiveness and efficiency. These dimensions can be crossed to characterize four types of employees:

Highly valued and unique employees are known as knowledge-based employees. Because knowledge-based employees possess valuable and unique skills, the company is expected to invest heavily in training and developing them, especially in developing skills specific to the company's needs

Highly valued employees who are not unique are known as job-based employees. Job-based employees are likely to receive less training than knowledge-based employees because although they create value for the firm, they are not unique. If they receive training, it would tend to focus on skills that they need to perform their jobs. Their development opportunities will be limited unless they have been identified as outstanding performers.

Employees with low value and uniqueness are known as contract employees. The training for contract workers likely would be limited to ensuring that they comply with company policies and legal or industry-based licensure and certification requirements.

Unique employees with low value are known as alliance/partnership employees. Because they are not full-time employees of the company but provide valued services, training for alliance/partnership employees tends to focus on encouraging them to share their knowledge and using team training and experiential exercises designed to develop their trust and relationships with job-based and knowledge-based employees.

2.55. What are the advantages and disadvantages of a centralized training function?

Advantages – (1) ownership of training to one organization; (2) elimination of course and program variation and duplication; (3) stronger alignment with business strategy; (4) development of a common set of metrics or scorecards to measure and report rates of quality and delivery; (5) streamlined processes; (6) cost advantage in purchasing training from vendors and consultants because of the number of trainees who will be involved; and (7) integration of programs for developing leaders and managing talent with training during times of change.

The most significant disadvantage is that the training function may not be in touch with the unique needs of different constituents.

2.56. Describe five strategies for marketing training to internal customers

• Involving the target audience in developing the training or learning effort

Demonstrating how a training and development program can be used to solve specific business needs

• Showing an example of how training has been successfully used to solve specific

business needs in the past

Identifying a "champion" who actively supports training

• Listening and acting on feedback received from clients, managers, and employees

Advertising on e-mail, on company Web sites, and in employee break areas

• Designating someone in the training function as an account representative who will interact between the training designer and the "customer"

• Determining what financial metrics top-level executives are concerned with and showing how training will help improve these

Speaking in terms that employees understand--avoid technical jargon
