The External Environment (Scenario)

DigiTech Corporation is a manufacturer of handheld language translation devices. There are many forces in the external environment that influence DigiTech, and its managers are monitoring them closely. One factor is the upcoming federal election. If elected, the leading political candidate has promised to cut corporate taxes to help stimulate the economy. Another factor is the emergence of new competitors with products similar to DigiTech's best-selling model: the Speak-Easy. Advances in the processing speed of computer chips have shortened product development cycles and made it easier for new companies to enter the market. Unfortunately, the recent increase in competition has led to supplier shortages of key components like microphones and micro-speakers, and left DigiTech scrambling to find new sources!

150) Identify the factors in the specific, general, and global environments that can influence an organization.

Answer: The specific environment includes customers, suppliers, competitors, and public pressure groups. The general environment includes the broad economic, political/legal, sociocultural, demographic, and technological conditions that may affect an organization. Changes in the specific environment usually have a greater impact on the organization than changes in the general environment. The global market presents many opportunities and challenges for the modern manager. The issues addressed in the general environment (economic, demographic, technological, sociocultural, and legal/political) need to be examined with aglobal perspective in mind as well. With the entire world as a market and national borders becoming increasingly irrelevant, the potential for intelligent organizations to grow expands dramatically.

151) Name and briefly describe how the gross domestic product, price indices, and unemployment are used to reflect the health of the Canadian economy?

Answer: Economic indicators such as gross domestic product, price indices, and unemployment are used to reflect the health of the economy. The gross domestic product (GDP) is the broadest indicator of a country's economic activity, expressed in the market value of goods and services produced in a country. The consumer price index (CPI) measures purchasing power and rises and falls with inflation and deflation. It has an impact on wages paid and the prices of products and services. The Bank of Canada's commodity price index (BCPI) measures the price of 24 Canadian commodities on the world market, while the MLS® Home Price Index (HPI) compares home prices across the country. The unemployment rate is calculated by the number of workers above age 16 who are not working. There are several complicating factors, such as seasonal and cyclical changes, but the unemployment rate is used by government and businesses for planning purposes.

152) Name and briefly describe the different features of the three main generations listed in Exhibit 2.2.

Answer: Baby Boomers (born 1946—1964) are competitive, idealistic, team players. They enjoy being in leadership roles and like recognition for their actions.

Generation X (born 1965—1979) trust themselves more than institutions, tend to avoid rules and bureaucracy. They favour learning in an action-oriented way.

Millennials (Born 1980—2000) are technologically advanced and connected globally. They appreciate feedback more than recognition, and value learning in a group or team setting.

- 153) Name and briefly describe six major regional trading alliances. Answer:
- The European Union (EU): Created in 1992, the EU was created as a unified economic and trade entity with 12 member countries—Belgium, Denmark, France, Greece, Ireland, Italy, Luxembourg, the Netherlands, Portugal, Spain, the United Kingdom, and Germany. By 2007, the EU comprised 27 countries. Three other countries (Croatia, the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, and Turkey) have submitted applications to join the EU. The EU's economic power has diminished somewhat with the European economic crisis, but the current EU membership encompasses more than 490 million people.
- The North American Free Trade Agreement (NAFTA): When agreements in key issues covered by the North American Free Trade Agreement (NAFTA) were reached by the Canadian, US, and Mexican governments in August 1992, a vast economic bloc was created in which barriers to free trade were reduced. In 2011, Canadian exports to the United States were $331 billion, which accounted for 72 percent of our total exports. Canada's exports to Mexico have quadrupled since the NAFTA agreement was signed, and its foreign investments in Mexico increased by a factor of five.
- The Association of Southeast Asian Nations (ASEAN) is a trading alliance of 10 Southeast Asian countries, including Brunei Darussalam, Cambodia, Indonesia, Laos, Malaysia, Myanmar, Philippines, Singapore, Thailand, and Vietnam, ASEAN encompasses a region with a population of about 500 million and a combined gross domestic product of $1496 billion.
- Trans-Pacific Partnership (TPP) is a group of nine countries comprising the United States, Australia, New Zealand, Singapore, Peru, Vietnam, Malaysia, Brunei, and Chile, which is intending to revolutionize Asian trade relations.
- Brazil, Russia, India, China, and South Africa (BRICS) is not a political alliance or a trading association, but it is a unique grouping with shared opportunities and common challenges. South Africa joined in 2011, and the group currently meets to create mechanisms for consultation and cooperation.
- Caricom Single Market and Economy (CSME) is intended to provide better opportunities to produce and sell local goods and services and to attract investment. It will create one large market among the participating member states, which include 15 Caribbean countries such as Bahamas, Barbados, Guyana, Grenada, Saint Lucia, and Jamaica.

154) List and explain six of Hofstede's dimensions of national culture.

Answer: Individualism versus collectivism: Collectivism is the degree to which people identify with the group. Collectivism lies in opposition to individualism, the degree to which people prefer to act on their own as individual agents. A culture that is rated as having high collectivist tendencies will have low individualistic tendencies; similarly, a culture that is highly individualistic is low on the collectivist scale. Power distance: Power distance is the degree to which people are accepting of gross differences in power in their society. A culture with a high power distance, for example, is likely to feature the "big boss" in its midst—an individual who has an excessive amount of social, economic, and perhaps military power and influence. In a culture of low power distance, individuals of power are reined in, relatively speaking. In cultures of low power distance individuals of differing status can speak as equals. In a culture of high power distance, interaction between individuals of different status are likely to be accompanied by overt displays of respect and other symbols of the power imbalance. Uncertainty avoidance: Uncertainty avoidance is a measure of how much a culture depends on social institutions, rules, and norms to cope with uncertainty. A culture with high uncertainty avoidance would tend to depend on rules and social institutions to deal with uncertainty. A culture with low uncertainty avoidance would want more flexible and less formal ways of dealing with uncertainty. High uncertainty avoidance cultures will tend to make very conservative decisions when facing uncertainty. Low uncertainty avoidance cultures tend to be more creative in facing uncertainty. Masculinity versus femininity: Achievement focuses largely on material items and describes a typical affluent Western consumer culture. Nurturing reflects the degree to which people value such things as family, loyalty, personal relationships, and other things that "money can't buy." Pragmatic versus normative: In societies with a normative orientation, most people have a strong desire to explain as much as possible. People in such societies have a strong concern with establishing the absolute truth and a need for personal stability. They exhibit great respect for social conventions and traditions, a relatively small propensity to save for the future, and a focus on achieving quick results. In societies with a pragmatic orientation, most people do not have a need to explain everything, as they believe that it is impossible to understand fully the complexity of life. The challenge is not to know the truth but to live a virtuous life. In societies with a pragmatic orientation, people believe that truth depends very much on situation, context, and time. They show an ability to accept contradictions, adapt according to the circumstances, and show a strong propensity to save and invest, and demonstrate thriftiness and perseverance in achieving results.

Indulgence versus restraint: Indulgence in society refers to willingness to have fun and enjoy life, while restraint refers to suppression of the gratification of needs through social norms. Indulgent people look to the future and value gratification and freedom of expression, while restrained people value tradition and the past and are comfortable suppressing their needs.

155) Explain the differences between a multidomestic corporation, a multinational corporation, and a transnational corporation.

Answer: All three entities are types of global corporations. Multinational corporations feature a home country that has the ultimate decision-making authority for the organization. In a multidomestic corporation, control is decentralized. The home country allows local management to more or less completely run the show for each operation, customizing products and services to fit the market as they see it. The transnational or borderless organization represents a step further in decentralization from the multidomestic. In a transnational, central control is abolished and all operations coordinate together, sharing in the decision-making process. Corporations choose the transnational approach to give their organizations a truly international stance, allowing them to pose as disinterested parties when it comes to making decisions that might favour one country over another.

156) Describe the steps a company takes in going global.

Answer: The first step in going global is some sort of outsourcing in which a company buys materials or labour or both from a foreign source. For example, a shoe company might outsource its manufacturing to a country in which labour is not as expensive as in its home country. After outsourcing, exporting and importing is likely to follow. For example, the shoe company may now begin to sell its shoes in foreign markets. It may also begin to import lines of specialty shoes to sell in its domestic stores. A larger commitment than exporting and importing involves licensing (selling the rights to make a product overseas) or franchising (selling the right to run a whole operation overseas). The third step in going global involves setting up strategic alliances, partnerships with foreign companies, and joint ventures, special partnerships in which a new company is formed to create a specific product. A shoe company might do this by setting up a partnership with a foreign leather company to produce handbags. The final step in going global is to set up a foreign subsidiary—a branch of your operation that will set up shop in the foreign location. In this case, the shoe company might build an entire shoe factory in a foreign location and hire local managers to run it.

157) Explain the difference between multinational, multidomestic, global, and transnational-borderless organizations. Provide examples for each type of organization.

Answer: Multinational corporation: A broad term usually used to refer to any and all types of international companies that maintain operations in multiple countries. A company that maintains significant operations in multiple countries but manages them from a base in the home country is a multinational corporation. Multidomestic corporation: An MNC that maintains significant operations in more than one country but decentralizes management to the local country is a multidomestic corporation. This type of organization does not attempt to manage foreign operations from its home country. Instead, local employees typically are hired to manage the business, and marketing strategies are tailored to that country's unique characteristics. This type of global organization reflects the polycentric attitude. Global companies: These companies centralize management and other decisions in the home country. They treat the world market as an integrated whole and focus on the need for global efficiency. Although these companies may have considerable global holdings, management decisions with company-wide implications are made from headquarters in the home country. This approach to globalization reflects the ethnocentric attitude. Transnational or borderless organizations: Many companies are going global by eliminating structural divisions that impose artificial geographical barriers. This type of global organization is called a transnational or borderless organization. Borderless management is an attempt by organizations to increase efficiency and effectiveness in a competitive global marketplace.

158) Explain what is meant by the term "born global."

Answer: The infrastructure that has been built in the past few decades has led to the creation of a new mindset represented by "born global." The classification of different types of international organizations tends to describe large international businesses. However, there is an increasing number of businesses called born globals that choose to go global from inception. These companies (also known as international new ventures, or INVs) commit resources up front (material, people, financing) to doing business in more than one country and are likely to continue to play an increasingly important role in international business. This new breed of company is a reflection of the new opportunities available for business.
