Most states have passed the Uniform Arbitration Act, which makes both the agreement of parties to arbitrate and the arbitration award enforceable in court. A court will not review the wisdom of the decision of an arbitrator. It may, however, hold that the dispute was not arbitrable under the agreement of the parties, or that the arbitrator exceeded his or her authority, or acted arbitrarily, capriciously, or in a discriminatory manner.

 - D. did not have judges that would understand the language spoken by him.

In this scenario, Chang can successfully argue that the court lacks personal jurisdiction. A court may not decide a legal dispute unless it has personal jurisdiction over the defendant. Personal jurisdiction generally does not exist unless the defendant has some close connection with the territory where the suit is brought. Personal jurisdiction is likely to exist if the defendant is a resident of the territory where the court is located or if a nonresident defendant is physically present in that territory.

Trial courts differ from inferior courts in that the trial courts are courts of general jurisdiction; they are not limited by the amount of civil damages that can be awarded or the criminal penalties that can be imposed. Their geographic jurisdiction is often a county. In addition, trial courts are courts of record. Thus, an appeal can be taken from a trial court decision.

- C. have both fact-finding and law-finding functions.
- D. are specialized courts in the federal court system.

With few exceptions, lawsuits brought in federal courts must be started in district courts. These are the federal trial courts. Like state trial courts, they have both fact finding (by the judge or jury) and law-finding (by the judge) functions.

- A. take up appeals only from other districts.
- B. review legal conclusions reached by lower federal courts.
- C. hear cases that have been appealed from Supreme Court decisions.
- D. take the final responsibility for interpretation of the Constitution and federal statutes.

An appeal from a district court is taken to a U.S. court of appeals. Like state intermediate appellate courts, the U.S. courts of appeals generally do not have a fact-finding function.

They only review the legal conclusions reached by lower federal courts. The courts of appeal also hear appeals from many federal administrative agency decisions.

31. Which of the following statements about the adversary system is true?

(p. 36)

A. The adversary system represents the idea that truth is best discovered through the presentation of competing ideas.

B. The judge, in an adversary system, is actively involved in determining the facts of a case.

C. The lawyers, in an adversary system, do not persuade the judge that the other party's view of the facts is in error.

D. The judges have a duty to direct the search for truth rather than expecting it to emerge from the efforts of the lawyers for the parties.

The adversary system represents the idea that truth is best discovered through the presentation of competing ideas. It is the lawyer's job to present the client's view of the facts to the judge, or to the jury if one is used. The judge's role, under the adversary system, is viewed as not only unbiased but also essentially passive. In essence, a trial judge acts as a referee.

B. These are the first documents filed with the court, and they start and define the lawsuit.

D. Both disputed and undisputed matters in the pleadings are tried in court.

Pleadings include complaints, answers, and replies. These are the first documents filed with the court, and they start and define the lawsuit. They serve two major functions: They inform the parties of each other's claims, and they form the basis for a trial. Only those matters that are disputed in the pleadings are tried in court.

The attorneys make closing arguments that sum up a case. Normally the defendant's attorney goes first. This gives the plaintiff, who has the burden of proof, the last word. The burden of proof for a criminal case is different from that for a civil case. In a criminal case the

(p. 27- business. Owing to loss of business and wages, both parties wanted to settle the dispute but were unable to negotiate successfully. Which method of dispute settlement is best suited to them? Why?

The method of dispute settlement that is best suited to them is mediation. Mediation is the best suited method to resolve the dispute in the given case because a mediator often tries first to communicate the positions of the parties to each other. It allows the parties to settle the case by appointing a mediator who merely facilitates the negotiation by proposing a basis for settlement and does not give awards or opinions on the merits of the dispute. It is a suitable method when the two parties, here the employees of Claudio Inc. and the management, have a continuing relationship because it allows them to compromise and to reach a solution themselves.

48. Explain the differences between trial courts and inferior courts.

(p. 33)

Trial courts differ from inferior courts in that the trial courts are courts of general jurisdiction; they are not limited by the amount of civil damages that can be awarded or the criminal penalties that can be imposed. Their geographic jurisdiction is often a county. They also differ in that the judge must be a lawyer, and juries are provided for. The juries decide the facts and, under instructions from the judge about the applicable law, reach a verdict. In addition, trial courts are courts of record. Thus, an appeal can be taken from a trial court decision.

(p. 37)

The function of a judge in the United States differs from that in Europe in a few ways. In Europe, judges have a duty to direct the search for truth but the judges in the United States expect the truth to emerge from the efforts of the lawyers for the parties. Also in Europe, judges assume a more active role in directing the proceedings in the court, in requesting certain evidence, and in questioning witnesses. On the other hand, the judges in the United States are merely responsible for the correct application of the law to the facts of the case and instructing the jury regarding the law.

A defendant may make a motion to dismiss the case rather than give an answer. If it is clear
