Essay

1. How are the police held responsible for their actions in a "free" society?

Ans: Police are held accountable for their actions via the ability of citizens to vote, organize, and protest. Through the power of voting, citizens hold elected officials responsible for their actions and for the actions of those who work under them. As a result, elected officials have expectations for police administrators, who in turn have expectations of their officers. In addition, citizens also have the right to organize and protest if they are unhappy with the behavior or actions of the police.

Learning Objective: 1-3: Explain how our system of democracy is supposed to make police accountable to citizens.

Cognitive Domain: Analysis

Answer Location: Police Accountability in a Free Society

Difficulty Level: Medium

2. Why is it difficult to measure “good” policing?

Ans: It is difficult to measure good policing for a number of reasons. First, it is hard to reach a consensus as to how we measure police performance; that is, what exactly do we consider to be indicative of “good policing”? Often times crime reduction is used as a measure to evaluate performance, but an increase or decrease in crime could be the result of a number of factors, and is not necessarily a reflection of police effectiveness. Next, there is no way to accurately measure crimes that do not occur. If “good policing” leads to less crime, how do we measure the amount of criminals who were effectively deterred from engaging in criminal activity? When attempting to measure “good policing,” it is often times more practical to identify specific examples of good police policies or “best practices” as an indication of how well a department performing, but even best practices can be ineffective if they are not being implemented correctly.

Learning Objective: 1-4: Identify and discuss the controversies and difficulties of policing.

Cognitive Domain: Analysis

Answer Location: Measuring “Good” Policing is Difficult

Difficulty Level: Hard

3. What is the difference between “sworn officers” and “civilians” who work in police departments?

Ans: Sworn officers take an oath to uphold the laws of the United States, their state, and their community. They also have the authority to make lawful arrests and to legitimately use force when necessary. Civilian employees do not take an oath nor do they have authority to make arrests or use force.

Learning Objective: 1-1: Explain the challenges associated with policing a free society.

Cognitive Domain: Analysis

Answer Location: Introduction

Difficulty Level: Medium

4. Freedom can be described as a relative concept, why?

Ans: Freedom is a dynamic, constantly changing concept. Within the United States, what freedoms exist may change from time to time. They change via the passage of new legislation, like the USA Patriot Act, and they may change as a result of Supreme Court decisions, like Miranda v. Arizona (1966).

Furthermore, freedom varies from jurisdiction to jurisdiction, both domestically, and internationally.

Learning Objective: 1-1: Explain the challenges associated with policing a free society.

Cognitive Domain: Application

Answer Location: The Challenge of Policing a Free Society

Difficulty Level: Medium

5. Why is it often suggested that police officers have an “impossible mandate”?

Ans: The police are expected to prevent and solve crime, but there are a number of limitations that make this virtually impossible. First, there are a number of factors that directly influence crime that police have no control over, like poverty, family structure, weather, unemployment, and self-control. Second, policing is largely reactive. As many crimes are never reported to the police, the police cannot respond to or solve all crimes. Third, police have finite resources and must follow the rules when investigating crimes. As such, they must manage manpower and control costs when deciding what types of investigative techniques to employ. In addition, officers’ actions are limited by the Constitution and by various organization rules and procedures.

Learning Objective: 1-1: Explain the challenges associated with policing a free society.

Cognitive Domain: Analysis

Answer Location: The Police are expected to Prevent and Solve Crime

Difficulty Level: Hard

6. Does the media provide an accurate representation of the police?

Ans: Answer may vary. The media generally does not provide an accurate representation of the police and their work. The news media is superficial and selective in choosing what to report. They disproportionately cover violent, random, or unusual crime and tend focus on incidents where police conduct is questionable, or when officers use force against citizens. Social media also reflects the trend in over representing incidents where officers act questionable, or inappropriately. Finally, the entertainment media provides an unrealistic view of the police, often exaggerating capabilities and effectiveness for dramatic effect.

Learning Objective: 1-4: Identify and discuss the controversies and difficulties of policing.

Cognitive Domain: Application

Answer Location: The Media Does Not necessarily Accurately Represent the Police

Difficulty Level: Medium

7. What is the difference between ethics and morality?

Ans: Ethics and morality are very similar, as both relate to distinguishing between right and wrong. The distinction is that morality deals with the individual and their sense of what constitutes proper conduct, while ethics is actual behavior exhibited by the individual.

Learning Objective: 1-6: Discuss the two main reasons why the ethical conduct of the police is of concern.

Cognitive Domain: Analysis

Answer Location: Ethics and Morals in Policing

Difficulty Level: Medium

8. What is meant by the “means-ends” distinction in policing?

Ans: Ends are the goals police hope to achieve, for example, catching criminals or reducing crime. Means are the methods employed by officers to achieve the goals or ends.

Learning Objective: 1-6: Discuss the two main reasons why the ethical conduct of the police is of concern.

Cognitive Domain: Analysis

Answer Location: Ethics and Morality in Policing

Difficulty Level: Medium

9. Why is using personal experience as an indicator of police performance not very reliable?

Ans: Our personal experiences with law enforcement are limited. Just because we have interactions with one officer, or one police department does not necessarily mean that this interaction is representative of other departments or officers. In addition, interaction may not even be representative of how that officer or department operates in general.

Learning Objective: 1-1: Explain the challenges associated with policing a free society.

Cognitive Domain: Analysis

Answer Location: Introduction

Difficulty Level: Medium

10. Provide an example of how officers exercise discretion while performing their duties?

Ans: Answer may vary. Officers are routinely required to exercise discretion, or their own judgment, while performing their duties. Examples could include deciding to ticket a motorist or give them a warning; whether or not to use force, and the appropriate level of force.

Learning Objective: 1-5: Discuss how police use of discretion and police use of force can make the police controversial.

Cognitive Domain: Application

Answer Location: The Police Use Discretion in Dealing With People

Difficulty Level: Medium

11. Explain why use of force is such a controversial aspect of policing.

Ans: Answer may vary. The police are unique in that they have the authority to use force, even deadly force, against citizens if the situation requires it. As policing often requires officers to make split-second decisions regarding the appropriate amount of force to use in a situation, mistakes are sometimes made in choosing the appropriate level of force to use, causing public outcry. In addition, even when officers do use the appropriate level of force, the public may still react negatively. Thus, use of force is highly controversial aspect of policing.

Learning Objective: 1-5: Discuss how police use of discretion and police use of force can make the police controversial.

Cognitive Domain: Analysis

Answer Location: The Police Have the Authority to Use Force When Dealing with Citizens

Difficulty Level: Medium

12. Provide at least three perceived benefits of the police utilizing body-worn cameras.

Ans: Answer may vary. Perceived benefits of the police utilizing body-worn cameras are as follows: strengthening accountability, improving officer professionalism, providing a more accurate record of events, improving officer and agency transparency, reveal officer misconduct, footage can be used as a training tool, and footage can be used as evidence for investigations and prosecution.

Learning Objective: 1-5: Discuss how police use of discretion and police use of force can make the police controversial.

Cognitive Domain: Analysis

Answer Location: Police Body-Worn Cameras

Difficulty Level: Medium

13. Provide two potential drawbacks of police using body-worn cameras.

Ans: Answer may vary. Potential drawbacks of police using body-worn cameras are as follows: cost, which is US$300-US$500 per unit, plus video storage fees; privacy, victims or others may not want their interaction with police recorded; security of the video while being stored; accuracy: does the video accurately reflect the situation at hand or does it only capture a portion of the interaction.

Learning Objective: 1-5: Discuss how police use of discretion and police use of force can make the police controversial.

Cognitive Domain: Analysis

Answer Location: Police Body-Worn Cameras

Difficulty Level: Medium

14. Why is comparing the number of crimes committed from 1 year to the next a poor indicator of police effectiveness.

Ans: Crime may fluctuate from year to year for a number of reasons that have nothing to do with police effectiveness, for example, the number of crimes committed may vary as the population increases or decreases. Crime counts may also fluctuate from 1 year to the next because citizens report more crime or report less crime.

Learning Objective: 1-4: Identify and discuss the controversies and difficulties of policing.

Cognitive Domain: Analysis

Answer Location: Measuring Good Policing is Difficult

Difficulty Level: Medium

15. Identify and provide examples of the four different forms of unethical conduct in policing.

Ans: Examples may vary. (1) Illegal means to accomplish good ends, for example, searching a house without a warrant in order to find evidence of drugs being manufactured. (2) Legal but unethical means to accomplish good ends, for example, lying to a suspect during an interrogation. (3) When the law is silent, for example, police creating fake social media pages to catch criminals by using details of arrestees. (4) Unethical ends, for example, police corruption, that is, engaging in theft, soliciting sex, accepting bribes, and so on.

Learning Objective: 1-6: Discuss the two main reasons why the ethical conduct of the police is of concern.

Cognitive Domain: Application

Answer Location: Forms of Unethical Conduct

Difficulty Level: Hard
